

Austin O. Roche IV

A life long interest in all science and technology topics. More than 35 years experience in computer electronics and semiconductor product management. Director of the Museum of Computer Culture. Volunteer at local technology museums. Austin has witnessed and participated in the evolution of computer technology from the era of the first monolithic microprocessor to current day. His current interest is the preservation of computer history and archival of digital and printed media.